

Elise N. Gingrich, DVM, MPH, MS

Dr. Elise Gingrich received her DVM from Iowa State University in 2005. After two years in a small animal/exotic practice in the Chicago area, she returned to her true passion, shelter medicine. Dr. Gingrich recently completed a three year residency in shelter medicine at Colorado State University, during which time she also finished her Master of Public Health and Master of Science degrees. Dr. Gingrich has always had a strong interest in infectious diseases impacting shelter animals, animal behavior, veterinary forensics, and public health. She also enjoys working with veterinary students and introducing them to the shelter environment. When not working, she enjoys spending time with her seven four-legged kids and, of course, her husband!
